

PHYSICIAN SPOTLIGHT

Jeremy Albin, MD

COLUMBUS GENERAL SURGERY

Faith is an important aspect of life to Jeremy Albin, MD. The general surgeon and his family attend Highland Park Church, and if he could have dinner with one person, Jesus Christ would be one of his two top choices.

Albin's faith also influences how he approaches his job. At Columbus General Surgery, he uses his God-given surgical tools to improve the quality of life for his fellow community members.

"I'm always going to do my best to treat the illnesses as presented," he said, "but also to address the underlying issues and root causes as I am able. I will always be honest (but generally optimistic) with my patients about their condition, and will refer them to specialists that I trust when I feel I am unable to help any longer."

Born in Kenya to medical missionaries, Albin was raised in central Nebraska and graduated from Broken Bow High School. He and his wife, Karin Ashley, chose to move to Nebraska 10 years ago so they could be closer to family — and so Albin could work under the mentorship of fellow surgeons Ron Ernst, MD, and Myron Morse, MD.

While Albin says he loves interacting with his patients and performing surgery, he sometimes finds it challenging to deal with constantly changing rules and regulations from the government and insurance companies.

When he's not performing surgeries or seeing patients, he enjoys spending time with his wife and six children. He also likes playing golf and reading books — his favorite authors are J.R.R. Tolkien, C.S. Lewis, Fyodor Dostoyevsky, Leo Tolstoy, John Calvin, Joel Beeke and Mike Horton.

And his most helpful piece of advice? "No one cares how much you know until they know how much you care."

“

No one cares how much you know until they know how much you care.

”

Visit columbushosp.org
to view our online physician directory, which can give you more information about the medical staff who serve our community.