Celebrate National Hospital Week with Columbus Community Hospital

For Immediate Release

(COLUMBUS, Neb.) – A hospital is more than a place where people go to heal. It also fosters good health and represents hope. From providing treatment and comfort to the sick to welcoming new life into the world, hospitals are a central part of a healthy and optimistic community. That’s the message Columbus Community Hospital (CCH) is spreading during National Hospital Week from May 12-18.

CCH is a community-owned, not-for-profit hospital that takes pride in its employees. CCH is led by a local board of directors and the hospital has a staff that includes a president/CEO, four vice presidents, a medical staff of nearly 50 active members and more than 740 employees. The hospital is also supported by more than 230 volunteers.

During National Hospital Week, CCH is encouraging community members to join in on social media to help recognize the hospital employees and volunteers who make CCH a welcoming, caring environment. During the week of May 12-18, log on to Facebook, Twitter and Instagram and use the hashtag #MyHospital to show your appreciation for our hardworking staff members.

National Hospital Week, first and foremost, is a celebration of people. CCH is extremely proud of each one of its staff members and hospital leaders work hard to recognize the important role they play in caring for our patients and community. During National Hospital Week, please help us celebrate the work of our dedicated employees.
